Accident victims' doctors optimistic' about recovery

CARMEN DURLAND
Universe Staff Writer

John Biddulph is in critical condition and Michael H. Paulos is in fair condition at McKay Dee Hospital in Ogden. They are the two victims of a one-car rollover accident that occurred Sunday morning, which killed three of their friends. The returned missionaries were on their way home from a weekend at a camp that was supposed to be a reunion. Staheli, Darin Webster Garner and A. Liddiard received fatal injuries when the car they were traveling on rolled over on southbound I-15 near Box Elder county line Sunday morning. "I spent the weekend (at Bear River) with most of R.J. Staheli's family," Paulos's father, Harold, said. "I was with them together and participated in recreational activities. We have been good friends for a long time. They went to (Provo) to school together. ... It's been a wonderful reunion the last few months," he said. Staheli is the nephew of Clyn Barrus, chair of the Music Department. Biddulph was operated on last night, Barrus said. "The doctors are optimistic about his recovery," he said, even though he is in critical condition. "Darin and Liddiard were playing basketball at Snow College, said

Paulos's father, and "Biddulph was going to go to Snow and try to walk on the basketball team."

As of Monday, Paulos was in fair and stable condition. "What he has is a brain bruise," his father said.

"In medical terms, it's classified as a severe brain injury," but it's not that serious, Harold Paulos said.

Michael returned from an LDS mission to Jacksonville, Florida a month ago. "He applied (at BYU) but wasn't accepted," his father said. "(Michael) had enrolled at UVSC and had been going to classes for a couple of weeks" at the time of the accident.

Michael has to decide today whether to continue school this semester. "I suspect he's probably going to withdraw," his father said.

Staheli is the son of Ronald Staheli, director of BYU's University Singers.

Staheli's viewing will be tonight from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Berg Mortuary, 185 E. Center, Provo. Funeral services will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday at the Oak Hills Stake Center, 865 E. North Temple Drive, Provo.

Staheli recently returned from an LDS Church mission to South Africa. Halfway through his mission, Staheli was sent home to recover from a serious bicycle accident before returning to South Africa.

Singers to perform at Devotional

JENNIFER DYER
Universe Staff Writer

The University Singers will perform at the Devotional today at 11 a.m. in the Marriott Center. The group is led by Dr. Ronald J. Staheli. The devotional will be a combination of music filled with a spiritual message along with brief testimonies and commentary by the choir members, said Dr. Clyn Barrus, chair of the Music Department. The choir will perform parts of Robert Frost's "The Redeemer." The choir recently released a recording of "The Redeemer."

The recording has been of great success, Barrus said. Approximately 1,000 students participated for the eight campus choirs at the beginning of the semester.

Two students were selected to be part of the University Singers. The University Singers is the largest singing group on campus. Amy Mangelson of the Music Department office.

The University Singers recently returned from a tour of Australia and New Zealand where they represented the United States at the International Choir Fest in Sydney, Australia. This was the group's first tour of Australia and New Zealand.

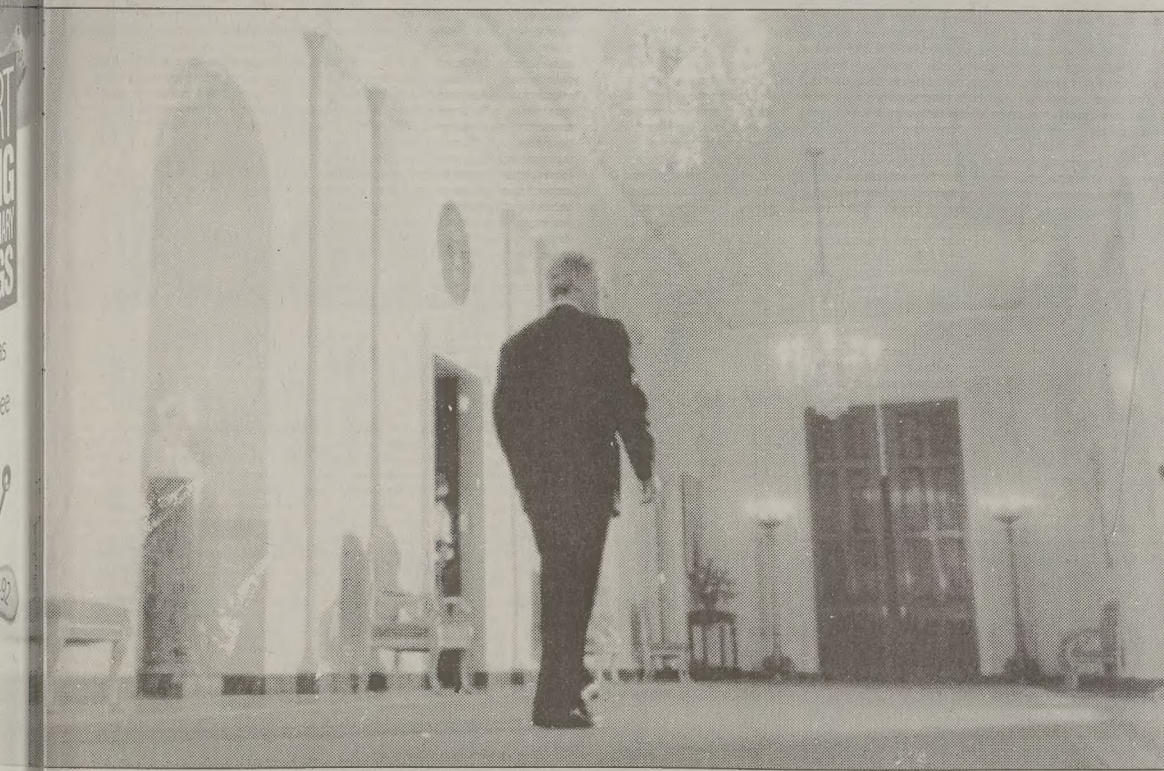

During their tour, the Singers performed in the Sydney Opera House. A recording of that performance was broadcast over national Australian television.

The University Singers, in conjunction with the other campus choirs, recently released a video and an audio recording of a performance entitled, "Hymns of Thanksgiving." It is a compilation of traditional American Folk music that has won national and international acclaim, Barrus said.

Tryouts for the choir were held during the first few days of the semester. However, there were many returning members from last year's choir, said Mangelson.

"Because of the number of people trying out, we have to be very selective. Most of the members are juniors or seniors, it is very rare that we have younger members."

McDougal sent to jail for silence on Whitewater

CONFIDENTIAL STROLL: President Clinton walks through the White House after a 1994 news conference controversy surrounding the Clintons' role in Whitewater continues as former business partner James McDougal was jailed Monday for refusing to answer questions before a federal grand jury.

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A defiant Susan McDougal was taken into a federal lockup Monday, surrendering her freedom rather than answer Whitewater prosecutors' questions before a federal grand jury.

President Clinton's former Whitewater business partner said she would not cooperate with Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr, who she accused of lying in his handling of her case. She renewed charges that prosecutors had offered her a deal of leniency in return for incriminating evidence against the president and Hillary Rodham Clinton.

"I'm so angry that they hold themselves out to be so full of integrity, so above reproach," McDougal told reporters outside the federal courthouse. "They will do anything. There's nothing they won't do" to get the Clintons.

Among the questions she refused to answer, she has said, was whether Clinton told the truth when he testified at her trial.

She insisted again that she was getting no assistance from the White House. "If the Clintons have helped me or the White House has helped me, then God help us all because I'm about to go to jail," she said.

McDougal was put in a federal lockup at the courthouse after surrendering to U.S. marshals.

She was to be transported to a county jail along with other prisoners being processed in federal court Monday, said supervisory Deputy Marshal Jim Hall. She was still at the courthouse lockup four hours after surrendering.

There was no immediate word which jail would be used.

Jennifer Horan, a federal public defender assigned to McDougal's case, said a notice of appeal and a request for a stay of the punishment would be filed. But it appeared nothing would stop McDougal from being transferred to the jail to serve up to 1 1/2 years for violating a judge's order to testify before the Whitewater grand jury.

On Saturday, Starr criticized McDougal and her attorney, Bobby McDaniel, for remarks made at the Little Rock airport on Friday and on CNN's "Larry King Live."

Starr said they were "brazenly trying to deceive the public" with TIMBER! Ray Floyd surveys the wreckage Hurricane Fran left at his home in Whiteville, N.C. Sept. 5. Besides the damage to homes and property, Fran's damage to Carolina crops may top the $179 million mark set by Hurricane Bertha. Other states, including West Virginia and Virginia are also suffering from loss of power and severe flooding.

Fran drowns Carolina crops

Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. — Bill Hubbard looked at the 100-acre swath of flattened, soggy cornstalks, his $50,000 loss a fraction of the crop damage caused by Hurricane Fran as it cut like a scythe across North Carolina.

"This just makes you sick," said Hubbard, whose field should have yielded 10,000 bushels. "When you farm, you always fight Mother Nature, and she's got the upper hand this year."

Hurricane Bertha in July inflicted $179 million to North Carolina's crops, and state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham said Hurricane Fran — which mostly flattened rather than soaked — could top that.

"What Bertha left, Fran got," said Graham, who joined U.S. Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman on a flyover of the state's damaged corn and cotton fields. "And we hope Hortense takes the long way around."

Hortense, a slow-moving tropical storm that upgraded to a hurricane Monday, edged across the Atlantic toward the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico.

There were no immediate overall estimates of Fran's crop damage in North Carolina.

The state, the nation's No. 1 tobacco producer, had already harvested most of its tobacco crop, but some leaves rotted in the barn when blackouts cut power to curing fans.

Flooding persisted across Fran's wake, and Federal Emergency Management Agency teams delivered portable generators to provide emergency power to isolated residents and to any hospitals and sewage plants that might have exhausted their backup power supplies.

Doug Culbreth of the state's Energy Division said 477,000 customers remained without power Monday afternoon. State troopers directed traffic at blacked-out intersections and helped utility crews.

Gov. Jim Hunt asked that 18 of the 34 counties already declared disaster areas be given additional federal help. He also asked state cleanup crews to pick up the pace.

"This is the worst disaster that we've had in this century," he said. "Everybody has been hurt by it. ... This is going to require extraordinary things."

Fran rolled through late last week, walloping the Carolina coast before turning north, slapping around the inland and breaking up into heavy rains. At least 28 people died, 17 in North Carolina, and a 17-year-old boy remained missing two days after going swimming in a swollen Raleigh creek.

Other states hit by Fran — mostly with flooding — also would be hit:

• In Virginia, rivers began receding after driving hundreds of people from homes and closing scores of roads and businesses. Flooding along the Potomac River closed commuter routes outside Washington. In the mountains, National Guard all-terrain vehicles were used to reach flooded hollows where people remained without electricity and drinking water.

• In West Virginia, hundreds remained without electricity or water, mostly in rural eastern regions along branches of the Potomac and the river itself.

• In Washington, the Potomac began to recede but not before flooding formed traffic bottlenecks around the National Mall. Water covered main roads used to reach many government offices.

Residents cope with hardships after hurricane

By JENNIFER ABSHER
Universe Staff Writer

Residents of North Carolina have been forced to live without electricity since Thursday, Sept. 5, when Hurricane Fran hit the coast. Although Raleigh is a two hour drive from the coast where most of the damage took place, many locals are trying to survive without power.

Aimee Gantt, who lives right outside of Raleigh, is still without electricity after five hot nights when she has had to use candles and flashlights to take care of her two sons.

"It's terrible," Gantt said. "I am eight months pregnant and it is so hot. We tried to use up all of our refrigerated and frozen foods first but a lot of our food has gone bad because we couldn't eat or cook it all."

She said they were lucky to have been able to get ice to put in their freezer. Truckloads of ice were brought in from Alabama to help residents.

Gantt, a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said the Church has provided a lot of help. She said two generators and chain saws were given to each ward to help those in need. One of the biggest problems Raleigh residents face is the fallen branches and trees on the roads and buildings.

Dana Blackman, 19, a biochemistry major at North Carolina State University in Raleigh, is also without electricity. Classes were cancelled Friday and Monday, but she says she doesn't know when they will start up again, because many students still don't have electricity even though the campus does.

She said she was sure that 85 percent of the residents would have power by Sunday, but she is one of those still trying to make do without electricity. Blackman said it has been difficult to do anything except stare at the lights and hope the power comes back on.

"There was food in the garbage disposal, and we couldn't run it so our kitchen smelled really bad," Blackman said. "They have power across the street but we are still relying on candles so we don't have to go to the bathroom in the dark."

"We don't have any hot water so we have to take cold showers," she said. But with no air conditioning, cold is not bad, she added.

Blackman lives next to the univer-

Anti-terrorism bill focuses on airline security

WASHINGTON— Promising safer skies, President Clinton issued orders Monday to tighten airport security and challenged Congress to support a $1.1 billion anti-terrorism crackdown. "Terrorists don't wait," the president said. "And neither should we."

The proposal, which came two months before the election, was designed to reassure jittery Americans after last year's Oklahoma City bombing and the explosion of TWA Flight 800 less than two months ago.

Recommendations of the proposal include criminal background checks of airline workers and specially trained dogs for security at key airports.

While promising to work with Clinton, Republicans said the action was unnecessary, referring to a GOP-backed $1 billion anti-terrorism bill signed in April.

Still, Clinton is requesting swift action from Congress. "We need these laws and we need them now before Congress recesses for the year," he said.

Administration officials said some of the money would come from current budgets, though they did not say what programs would be cut to pay for the anti-terrorism plans.

'Independence Day' ad frightens Spaniards

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Hundreds of panicked Spaniards flooded TV and radio switchboards with calls this weekend when a newscaster broke in with a report showing space aliens hovering over New York.

The purported news flashes that appeared Saturday and Sunday on the Telecinco network were in fact advertisements for the film "Independence Day," which opens in Spain on Friday.

The PubliEspana advertising firm figured viewers wouldn't be taken in by the TV takeoff of H.G. Wells' "War of the Worlds" — the 1942 radio stunt that created a short but memorable panic in the United States.

"We wanted to cause some excitement, but certainly not fear," Jose Luis Andarias, an advertising executive, said Monday.

A text warning on the bottom of the TV screen said "advertisement," but "apparently people can't watch footage, listen and read at the same time," Andarias said.

Experts predict Reserve will raise interest rates

WASHINGTON — The likelihood that the Federal Reserve Board will increase interest rates has jumped dramatically following a steep decline in the unemployment rate, in the view of many top economists.

While Reserve officials passed up opportunities to raise interest rates at their July and August meetings, believing the economy was beginning to slow, a string of reports since then have called that view into question. Factory orders and housing sales took unexpectedly big jumps in recent reports, and Friday's report showed unemployment dropping in August to its lowest level in seven years, 5.1 percent, down from 5.4 percent in July.

Many analysts said they believed the Reserve will feel the need for only two or three modest quarter-point tightening moves that would drive the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other on overnight loans, from 5.25 percent currently to 5.75 percent or 6 percent.

Iraq urges U.N. to condemn U.S. 'war crime'

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq denounced U.S. missile strikes on southern Iraq as a "war crime" on Monday and urged the United Nations to condemn the action.

Fighting between rival Kurdish factions raged Monday south of Irbil, the main Kurdish city, a "safe haven" in northern Iraq patrolled by U.S.-led forces. A U.N. guard protecting international aid workers in Irbil told The Associated Press that the clashes were "pretty substantial."

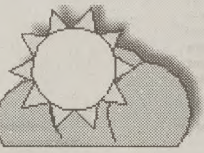

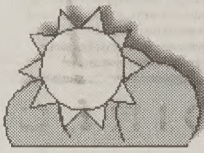

U.S. intelligence indicated that Saddam Hussein's troops were backing away from a Kurdish region in the north, said Air Force Lt. Col. Nino Fabiano, spokesman for the U.S. Central Command.

In southern Iraq, U.S. aircraft patrolled the skies without challenge today, Fabiano said.

The latest report of clashes came after two days of U.S. missile strikes at air defense systems in southern Iraq, aimed at punishing Baghdad for its incursion into the north.

"What the U.S. is doing is considered a war crime," the state-run newspaper al-Jumhuriya said in its editorial, calling on U.N. members. "You can take a strong stand to stop the new criminal plot by the U.S."

remarks about dealings with his office.

"Their continued attempts to mislead the public as to the true nature (of a conversation with Starr's staff) are outrageous and unethical," Starr said.

Referring to California's murderous cult leader, McDougal said Sunday that "Kenneth Starr calling me unethical is like Charles Manson calling me crazy."

On Wednesday, a federal judge found McDougal in contempt of court for refusing to talk to the Whitewater grand jury and ordered her to jail for up to 18 months unless she answers prosecutors' questions.

On Friday, McDougal said prosecutors had abused and harassed her in an effort to obtain incriminating information against the Clintons, who were partners with her and her ex-husband, James, in the Whitewater land development in northern Arkansas.

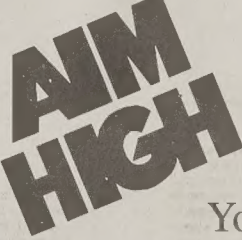

McDougal was convicted May 28 on four felony counts related to a $300,000 loan she received in 1986.

She said prosecutors first offered leniency if she would incriminate the Clintons and then recommended a stiff sentence when she refused. She was sentenced Aug. 20 to two years in prison.

Starr said Saturday that McDougal and McDaniel "persist in misrepresenting the substance of a conversation with my staff during which Ms. McDougal was offered the opportunity to voluntarily provide complete and truthful information about matters within the jurisdiction of this office."

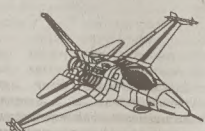

McDougal and McDaniel "were specifically told that under no circumstances would we recommend a specific sentence to the court on her felony convictions or do anything to limit the court's sentencing discretion," Starr said.

A HAPPY FAMILY: Students enrolled in the Freshman Academy are placed into units such as this one to promote discussion, participation and better study habits. A main focus of the Academy is to encourage first-year students to get better acquainted with each other, faculty members and a college classroom setting.

By SHEA CUTLER
Universe Staff Writer

Walking into a class where no one is familiar can be intimidating, especially for freshmen. To help ease the transition from high school to college, approximately 540 freshmen are participating in the Freshman Academy. The concept began 10 years ago, but 12 years ago, the name Freshman Academy was given to describe the program designed for freshmen orientation. It began as an effort to bridge the gap between the academic and housework of school. "The people really get frustrated with the transition," said Ted Hindmarsh, co-chair of the Steering Committee. "There isn't anything we can do to keep the tough times from coming, but there are some things we can do to buoy people up and help them when that happens." Hindmarsh said the things freshmen find helpful were "people who care, people they can rely on, study groups, and the cards and stakes." These are things that were helpful in high school, but are all of a sudden missing in college," Hindmarsh said. "The sort of putting those back in, building a sense of community, so when the tough times come they'll have a support system."

In students enroll in the Freshman Academy, they are immediately enrolled in three classes required of freshmen: English 115, 216 or 115/216; Religion 121; and Biology 101, Humanities 101, History 201, African Heritage 100, or Honors

Comparative Literature.

Lori Echardt, a second year English graduate student teaching English 115 for Freshman Academy said the students have been quite responsive so far, and those in the academy seem more willing to participate and less intimidated than the other freshmen she has taught.

John Bytheway, who is teaching Religion 121, said the contrast between teaching and conducting youth conferences is amazing.

"Sometimes at youth conferences some youths are forced by their parents to come, so it takes a while to show them that there is excitement in the scriptures. Here, that work is already done," he said.

Bytheway also noticed the spirit of camaraderie among academy students. "I love what I see so far. There's a good spirit in the classroom because they know each other."

Bytheway said he's grateful for the opportunity to participate in the academy. "I've always had a love of teaching and studying the gospel," he said. "I have a real love for the scriptures that I hope to pass on to my students."

Michael Phillips, an instructor for Humanities 101, has been teaching academy students for three years. He said the program really helps integrate students into university life.

"I recall my freshman and sophomore years as big decision-making years," he said. "I see this as an opportunity to deal with students across the disciplines, and to deal with people when they are trying to make important decisions in their life and to be influential in that."

Kiss terrorize SLC with sounds of the '70s

By ALISHA HAMILTON
Lifestyle Editor

I told people I was going to the Kiss concert at the Delta center last night, they looked at me like I was nuts. But I really had to go.

It was something from childhood and how my parents were the biggest Kiss fans in the world, but I felt like an experience I shouldn't miss. I must admit I was looking forward to the blood, fire and explosions.

Stanley, Gene Simmons, Ace Frehley, and Peter Criss, all now in their mid- to late-40s, in full makeup and costume — it was a sight to see. I just don't know what's up with those platform, high-heeled boots.

Each member of Kiss has their own costume, but Stanley is the only one with a character. Stanley was the wanna-be sex symbol of the '70s, but just repulsed me with his male chauvinist low-class demeanor. The woman's movement, especially in rock, has come a long way since then.

Simmons was the cheerleader of the band, always trying to get the crowd to clap and play along. Peter Criss hides well behind his mask and drum set. You can never tell what's going on in his mind.

Ace Frehley would have to be the most dignified, if someone can be dignified in a silver space suit.

Although, we try to ignore it, Kiss did have a major influence on rock music, whether people chose to copy or rebel is another issue. Poison copied; Sonic Youth rebelled.

But Kiss can put on a show — no one can argue that. It was full of hype and cheesy rock cliches. What else would you expect?

There were three large screens to make sure you didn't miss anything that was happening on the large stage, a $50,000 Kiss sign that could light up so bright it would make you squint, and enough explosives to blow up the Delta Center if something went wrong.

The members of Kiss are full of ego, and each one had to have their own time in the spotlight, as evidenced by their solo albums in '78. The best solo, for quality sake, had to be Peter Criss' drum solo. It was excellent — for an arena-rock drum solo.

However, the best solo, for effects sake, was Gene Simmons' bass solo. After everyone but Simmons left the stage, you could tell it was time for the Kiss legend to do his thing. Maybe the way he didn't open his mouth and it looked full of something gave it away.

Well for those of you who don't get it, his mouth was full of blood. Not real blood, but a great concoction of ketchup and eggs and other food items that create the effect that Simmons is spitting blood.

This was definitely my favorite part of the show. (And let's just clear this up now, his tongue is not a sewed-on cow tongue.) Then Simmons flew in the air up to the rafters and performed up there. It was quite dramatic.

Flying objects seemed to be a repeated theme. In Ace Frehley's rockin' guitar solo, he jammed so hard that his guitar caught on fire and smoked until he let it go and it floated up to guitar heaven, or wherever burning guitars go.

Well, you may notice that I haven't mentioned the music. There's a reason for that. I mean I was dancing, but I was thinking the whole time how glad I was the '80s are over.

While I was hootin' and hollerin' like the Kentuckian I am, I started to feel reminiscent ... but then I remembered I'd never experienced this before, like most of the 30-somethings in the crowd who knew all the words to the songs.

I was a child in the '70s. This was all new to me. I was laughing, thinking do these people really like this stuff?

But there's probably a 7-year-old out there now that will laugh at the music of the '90s. In 17 years, the Pixies will play a reunion tour and I'll cry with joy, and that 7-year-old will be laughing, thinking does she really like this?

Kiss was the band of the '70s. Thank goodness for the '90s and the evolution of rock.

CONCERT REVIEW

Diamond Rio hit Manti

CONCERT REVIEW

By SUSAN HAWS
Special to the Universe

Diamond Rio waited two hours in line to eat at the only restaurant available before their concert in Manti Saturday evening.

Performing in Manti, created a culture shock for these popular country singers. "Of course, there was vacancy," Marty Roe, the lead singer, joked about the motel they stayed at in Nephi.

One of the guitar players said the only entertainment they could find before the concert was an afternoon walk down the only main street in town. He said he was glad they were welcomed with good weather.

"We're not in Tennessee anymore, the band members joked. However, they said they always enjoy playing in Utah. Three years ago, they held a concert in St. George.

"I never knew there were so many country fans in Utah," one of the band members commented. "I thought you were all a bunch of turkey farmers."

The band said they made this conclusion after being offered a turkey dinner from the town.

Diamond Rio performed to a crowd of boot-wearing fans at the Sanpete County Fairgrounds on an open stage. The Manti Temple filled as their background.

"Dan, you look real good with the temple behind you," Roe teased.

Dan, the keyboard player, is the only member of the band who is a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He just smiled when the other members of the band commented that he was the only one of Diamond Rio allowed inside the temple.

"That is quite a pad," one of the band members said, pointing to the temple.

The lead singer displayed his guitar with "Elvis" printed on the front and asked if the temple is where The King might be hiding.

The band played several numbers from their new CD "Diamond Rio IV." Roe said that the band felt like this was their best music so far. "We are all proud of this accomplishment," he said.

The performance also included what they referred to as a pickin' session. Roe said they wanted to imitate when people used to sit on their porches and pick out favorite tunes to play.

Jimmy Olander, one of the guitarists, chose the first song of their pickin' session. Each guitarist followed suit by choosing a chord or singing a song.

Halfway through a lyric about love, one of the band members noticed the temple in the background and forgot the words he was singing.

Roe said this mistake is what the pickin' session is all about.

"This is the part of the concert where we sing songs we don't know," he said.

For all country fans, Diamond Rio's concert was a success.

The most common compliment we get at Wilson Diamonds is that the people here are "different." We've also been told they're more friendly, patient, and knowledgeable. Which isn't surprising because we never talk about how to "close" a sale, just how to best serve customers. We consider pressure a poor substitute for substance. That's why for the past 25 years our customers have consistently recommended us to their friends.

Of course, it's easy for us to be genuine and warm. With our guaranteed prices, huge selection of quality rings, unmatched guarantees, and liberal return policy we are unthreatened, letting you look around and compare. QB controversy embroils UW

STICK 'EM UP! BYU Outland Trophy winner Jason Buck gets in the face of a University of Washington quarterback at Cougar Stadium in 1985. In the first meeting between the two schools, BYU won 31-3. The next year, the Cougars traveled to Seattle and lost 52-21.

By JON D. HILL
Universe Sports Writer

Down 42-21 in Saturday's season opener against Pac-10 rival Arizona State, Washington Huskies head coach Jim Lambright looked into his players' eyes and saw something he liked.

"I looked into their eyes and their eyes said we could win this game," said Lambright. This statement proved true of at least one player, freshman quarterback Brock Huard.

Lambright called on Huard to replace junior starter Shane Fortney with 12 minutes remaining in the game. Huard responded by guiding the Huskies on three scoring drives tying the game 42-42.

Huard's late-game heroics fell short when a shanked punt allowed Robert Nycz to kick a 38-yard game-winning field goal with two seconds remaining, giving the Sun Devils a 45-42 victory.

The Huskies' three scores with Huard at the helm consisted of a 10-yard run by Huard, a 67-yard touchdown pass to freshman Gerald Harris and an 8-yard run by tailback Corey Dillon.

Although Huard's performance did not produce a victory, it may have caused a quarterback controversy in Seattle as Washington prepares for its home opener Saturday against BYU.

Lambright said he liked Huard's ability to close well and make the big play, but his performance will not result in a starting job this week.

"Shane will start, but there will be more competition in practice this week," Lambright said.

Lambright is pleased with Fortney's leadership qualities, but said he hurried his passes too much in crucial situations.

"Shane needs to learn how to complete passes that will keep a drive going," Lambright said.

Lambright is happy with the depth at the quarterback position, and said if Fortney starts slow and does not get the job done against BYU, he would not hesitate to put Huard in the game.

Lambright said he expects the Huskies to start quicker and play better this week as a result of being at home and gaining a week of playing experience.

He said that regardless of which quarterback is in the game, the Huskies' attack will be based around Rashaan Shehee and Dillon, the team's two star tailbacks.

BYU head coach Lavell Edwards said it doesn't matter which quarterback plays, the Cougar defense will prepare the same way.

Edwards said the only difference is that Huard is left-handed and Fortney right-handed.

Weekend roundup of the WAC

Associated Press

UNLV came into its weekend game against Air Force having allowed an average of 48.5 points in its previous 12 games.

After a 65-17 loss Saturday night in Las Vegas, the number is even higher (49.8) now, which means the Western Athletic Conference newcomers are fitting right in with their new surroundings.

In a league that sometimes seems to disdain defense, UNLV has given up 62 and 65 points in its first two games.

The Rebels became the second team in as many weeks to be hammered by Air Force in their WAC debuts. AFA embarrassed San Jose State 45-0 a week ago.

It was the lone WAC game of the weekend.

The WAC went 6-5 against non-conference opponents, including impressive upset victories by Southern Methodist, Texas Christian and Utah and another comeback win by Wyoming — all on the road.

SMU, a 12-point underdog, shocked Arkansas 23-10 in Fayetteville. TCU broke Oklahoma's string of 13 opening-day victories with a 20-7 win in Norman. Utah, rebounding from last week's loss to Utah State, beat Stanford 17-10 at Stanford. Wyoming edged Iowa State 41-38 in overtime in Ames.

Elsewhere, San Diego State kicked off its season with a 40-21 thumping of Idaho in San Diego, New Mexico downed Northern Arizona 49-33 in Albuquerque, Colorado State fell to No. 5 Colorado 48-34 in Fort Collins, Rice was whipped by No. 8 Ohio State 70-7 in Columbus, Hawaii lost to Ohio 21-10 in Honolulu, San Jose State bowed to California 45-25 in San Jose and Fresno State was humiliated by No. 15 Auburn 62-0 in Auburn.

No. 14 Brigham Young, Texas-El Paso and Tulsa were idle.

SMU, which has already posted more victories than it did all of last season, has won two in a row for the first time since 1992 and is off to a 2-0 start for the first time since 1985.

SMU's lone win last season was a 17-14 decision over Arkansas.

TCU opened its season as redshirt freshman Jeff Dover passed for two touchdowns to beat Oklahoma.

Utah forged a 17-0 third-quarter lead and then hung on to beat Stanford. Mike Fouts passed for 222 yards and a touchdown.

"When these kids play, we can beat anybody," Ute coach Ron McBride said. "This was a totally different team (compared to last week)."

Cory Wedel kicked a 41-yard field goal on Wyoming's first possession of overtime. The Cowboys, trailing by 15 points with five minutes left, got a 12-yard touchdown pass from Josh Wallwork to Marcus Harris and a 3-yard TD run by Len Sexton with 1:53 left.

"We have a football team that believes in their ability to win any game at any time," Cowboy coach Joe Tiller said.

Wyoming has surrendered 30 points in each of its first two games, won both.

San Diego State — without starting back George Jones, wide receiver Will Blackwell and defensive back Ricky Parker because of NCAA suspensions — made its debut by intercepting four passes. Hakim caught six passes for 101 yards and a touchdown.

Brigham Young University Singers

The BYU Singers have represented The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and Brigham Young University in concert appearances throughout the world. They have sung in Russia, Israel, and Europe, as well as the U.S., and returned just days ago from New Zealand and Australia.

Official United States representatives to the Fourth International Choral Symposium in Sydney, Australia, the University Singers were also featured at the International Festival of Choirs in Auckland,

New Zealand, and the World's Greatest Choirs Series, in Brisbane, Australia.

Each year the choir brings together approximately 40 multi-talented students from all over the United States. These students represent a broad diversity of educational pursuits, but they all share an ability and love for music, especially singing.

Their artistry, expressiveness, and versatility combine to create a unique presentation, one with a message of hope and goodwill for people everywhere.

Victory sweet for Sampras, Graf

Associated Press

NEW YORK — When the 137 mph serves had disappeared at the far end of the court, the rackets packed away, the year's final Grand Slam tournament a two-week memory and the National Tennis Center awash in rain, the champions reigned.

Pete Sampras survived, not only the firepower from across the net, but a gut-wrenching quarterfinal in which he was barely able to walk off the court a winner.

Steffi Graf thrived, showing once again that despite the convoluted computer rankings there's really only one No. 1 in the women's game.

Sampras counts Grand Slam tournament titles as the measure of his success. The U.S. Open triumph was his only major one of 1996, but the eighth of his career and fourth at the National Tennis Center.

"These past two weeks I have played my share of great tennis and poor tennis," Sampras said Sunday after brushing aside Michael Chang in the title match 6-1, 6-4, 7-6 (7-3). "I got through the (Alex) Corretja match and I never thought I would be here as a winner. But I fought hard and played the best match of the tournament today against Michael, so it really saves my year. It really does."

To become the first American to successfully defend his U.S. Open crown since Connors in 1983, Sampras was forced to go five sets against Jiri Novak of the Czech Republic, ward off the laser serves of Australia's Mark Philippoussis and Croatia's Goran Ivanisevic as well as survive his five-setter against Corretja.

"I never thought I'd be here as a winner," Sampras said of his newest title. "This is the most difficult (championship) I ever won. The ranking was up for grabs, but the title is so much more important than the ranking. I wanted the title."

Part of the reason was the Corretja match in which he vomited on the court and seemed at times unable to continue, only to pull it out when the Spaniard double-faulted on match point.

Then there was the loss of his close friend and coach, Tim Gullikson, who died in May from brain cancer.

Any one of several players — Sampras, Chang, Thomas Muster, Chang, Yevgeny Kafelnikov and Ivanisevic — could conceivably have taken over the No. 1 ranking by winning the U.S. Open. Sampras put all that nonsense to rest.

Likewise with Graf, who is co-ranked No. 1 with Monica Seles, this year's Australian Open champion. And like Sampras, Graf has enough emotional problems to be considered beatable.

She admits her off-court problems are affecting her. Her jailed father Peter is on trial in Germany for evading taxes on $28 million of her income. She remains under investigation.

"It was really, really difficult to play this tournament," said Graf, who beat Seles 7-5, 6-4 in Sunday's final. "I was really struggling to remain focused."

That hasn't stopped Graf's hurried pace toward being the best ever to play the sport. It was her sixth consecutive Grand Slam tournament win, and her 21st Grand Slam tournament crown. Graf trails only Margaret Smith Court, who has 24 major singles titles.

"Steffi is clearly No. 1," Seles said. "Everybody can see that."

sity and said she had a hard time driving around the city because of flooding, downed power lines and fallen trees.

"I only saw one intersection that had a cop there directing traffic," Blackman said.

"Most of the major intersections still don't have electricity and the roads are horrible. I saw a car flooded up to its brake lights and the roads finally cleared up Sunday, but then it rained again last night and everything flooded again."

She has had to eat out for the past four days and said she has waited in lines stretched down the block.

"I don't think anybody will complain about their electric bill ever again," Blackman said. "I live in a really populated area, and we don't have electricity but at least we have running water and telephones. Some people don't even have that."

Netanyahu refuses West Bank withdrawal

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu looked to the Clinton administration Monday to re-open peace talks with Syria, but ruled out a withdrawal from the Golan Heights as a precondition for peace with the Arab nation.

"Like us, the United States wants the talks resumed," Netanyahu said. "I don't know if Syria wants it. We are looking for a solution in words."

President Clinton, meeting with Netanyahu at the White House, agreed that "it's not an easy road ahead," but reassured Netanyahu the U.S. considered peace and security to be indivisible goals.

A senior Israeli official said the main obstacle was Syria's insistence that Israel first commit to withdraw from the Golan Heights as a part of a peace accord. But Israel would not give up the strategic high ground it won in the 1967 Six-Day War, he said.

"Our position is that we will do it under the right circumstances. We are not acting according to the calendar," the official said.

Bosnian election campaign follows battle lines

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnia's 3 1/2-year war was fought between those who wanted a single country and those who wanted to break it apart. The campaign for the first postwar national elections on Saturday has been fought over the same issue.

If advocates of national unity ultimately prevail, it may be only because of outside pressure and the presence of foreign soldiers.

The Dayton peace agreement and tens of thousands of NATO-led soldiers were supposed to establish a compromise: a weak national government unifying a Muslim-Croat half and a Serb half.

But Serbs — and many Croats — still insist on a separate identity and separate institutions. Most Muslims fought for, and still insist on, a united Bosnia, although they want Muslims at its helm.

About 2.9 million people are eligible to vote Saturday for three members of a joint presidency — one Muslim, one Serb and one Croat.

Voters also will elect the lower house of a national legislature. Serbs will choose their own assembly and president of their half of Bosnia. Muslims and Croats will elect an assembly.

In the final days of campaigning, it was clear that behind every candidate's stump speech was a single issue: not unemployment or the rebuilding of the shattered nation, but in what form Bosnia will exist.

"These are not elections ... in which people face a dilemma of whether they should turn a little to the left or to the right," Bosnian Prime Minister Hasan Muratovic said.

"This is about the survival of the state of Bosnia-Herzegovina, about the battle for the establishment of its new structure."

Officials of the leading Serb party have done little to ease Muslims' fears. Aleksa Buha, the top official of the Serbian Democratic Party, told a rally that "the former Bosnia-Herzegovina will fall apart after the September elections."

In Washington, State Department Spokesman Nicholas Burns said Monday that the fate of the Dayton accord does not hinge on the success or failure of Saturday's elections.

"These elections are important because they will lead the way to the creation of the new institutions that will be the foundation of the new state that emerges from this Dayton process," he said.

"But these elections ... were never designed to be the end of the process. In fact, in a very real sense, they're the beginning of the process."

Opposition parties are hoping they can win enough seats to temper the dominant nationalist parties — Muslim, Serb and Croat. They say such moderation is the best way to encourage hundreds of thousands of refugees to come home, and to create a semblance of the old, multi-ethnic Bosnia.

"The better the opposition parties do, the more secure refugees will feel to come home," said Ahmed Tufegdžija, a local Muslim leader of the opposition Liberal Party in government-controlled Konjic, 25 miles southwest of Sarajevo.

Foreign powers, meanwhile, will continue to try to push Muslims, Serbs and Croats together, through a smaller military force that is expected to be left behind in Bosnia in December when the current mandate expires.

The immediate problem is making sure that Bosnians can vote safely on election day Saturday.

The peace force and U.N. police will be out in force, and they are encouraging voters to stick to well-patrolled routes. They say they will arrest anyone who interferes with balloting, but that it is up to local police to keep the peace.

Computer connects patients online to classmates, teachers, homework

By MELINDA BEAL
Universe Staff Writer

A new computer in the Pediatric Adolescent Community Medicine Unit at the University of Utah Medical Center is reducing the impact of extended hospital stays on children's education.

A computer with access to the Internet gives patients direct communication with their teachers and classmates, which keeps them from getting too far behind.

Tamar Prero, the in-house school teacher for the medical center, said the new technology is just what the patients need.

"Hospitalized students who feel isolated from their classmates and home schools can now communicate with them directly," Prero said.

If a patient's school is Internet-accessible then a direct communication is set up. If not, the hospital has a library of educational software that can be used.

Connecting hospitalized school-aged children to their teachers is a part of Governor Leavitt's efforts to make "all of Salt Lake School District Internet-accessible," Prero said.

"The students at our hospital should be just as connected as students in remote parts of the state. More than 500 patients a year pass through our unit and anything we can do to reduce the stress associated with their hospital stay is important," Prero said.

Prero is responsible for allotting time for each child on the computer. The computer is accessible for short-term and long-term patients and is on a moveable cart so that it can be taken from room to room.

The computer was purchased with funds from the Henry W. and Leslie Eskuche Foundation.
